Soul Veil

A nightingale, veiled by shades,
Breathes softly between the lines,
As a memory of love fades
The spirit has kept the vines.

Not for the praise, nor for fame—
Simply as the garden breathes,
A song as a quiet flame
The velvet evening releases.

In the trills—pain and tenderness,
Sweet forgetting and peace,
As if a soul's messiness
Turned to a clean stream of breeze.

And while the earth is awake,
And while the deep shadows peak,
The nightingale guards for our sake
These hopes the human souls seek.